Sara Guidolin

Multi-instrumentalist & performer bridging contemporary music and visual practice

Sara Guidolin is an Italian multi-instrumentalist: blending vocals, cello, piano through composition and interdisciplinary textile “DIY” practices.

Based in Amsterdam since 2023, she’s mainly active in the Dutch improvised music scene, where she collaborates as side musician with various jazz-related, improv and songwriting groups and collectives and has participated in several important venues and festivals around Europe, such as “Intergalactic Night” festival organised by SITP at Bimhuis, (Amsterdam, 2025), “PaRaDoX”, (Tilburg, 2025), “La Casa del Jazz”, (Rome, 2019), “National Museum of Romanian Art”, (Bucharest, 2022).

In her main projects: Carta Pestœ, an hyperpop and punk impro trio with Beatrice Sberna and Marco Luparia; Mirtilla, a voice and harpsichord duo with Katerina Orfanoudaki; Sara & The Persimmons, her project as a band leader, with which she recorded her debut album “everything I thought on monday”, released with JIPO Records on Bandcamp, Soundcloud and Nina Protocol in 2025 and supported by Amarte Foundation.

DIY MUSIC: COMPOSITION AS A CRAFT

An experimental project that blends crochet and composition, (2025)

For finishing my Master studies at the Conservatorium Van Amsterdam I made a research on sound and visual practices, creating three crochet artworks and three related compositions. Below, the abstract of my research:

"This research is aim to explore the intersection between crochet and composition through an experimental and interdisciplinary project. The project began with the creation of three crocheted panels made with the "free-style" techinque. These panels were then used as inspiration for improvisations by 15 musicians who interacted with the panels both tactilely and visually that have been recorded through sessions that I conducted. These recorded improvisations served as the material for composing three new musical pieces through a musical editing software.

Through this qualitative and explorative experiments, focusing on in-depth individual responses and artistic interpretation, I analyzed the recorded materials and the interviews, categorizing musician's inspirational origin in three main types: sensory, emotive and imaginary. Through data analysis of 102 improvisations, (two improvisations based on tactile and on visual for each panel), the research revealed that tactile experiences primarily evoked sensory responses while visual experiences often led to more complex emotional and imaginative interpretations.

The resulting compositions are three "DIY" music aesthetic tunes, treating the recorded improvisations as threads to be woven together, mirroring the crochet process itself. This methodology not only creates a bridge between fiber arts and music but also explores new approaches to composition and interdisciplinary artistic expression. The project demonstrates how cross-disciplinary inspiration can generate innovative creative processes and outcomes, while also investigating the relationship between tactile experience and musical interpretation."

Panel #4 is the final output of my master research in which I recorded an improvisation on a pre-recorded tape by myself, using the fourth panel I crocheted from this serie as inspiration. I also created a video of the realization of the panel in stop-motion.
